RADER TO TAKE STAND IN BEHALF OF CHOIRMASTER

Defendant Denies Story Told Jury by 18-Year-Old Schoolgirl

Lake Rader, pastor of the Riverside Tabernacle, will take the witness stand Monday in district court to defend Nelson Schmaster, Jansen Nelson, on trial on charges preferred by an 18-year-old girl.

Rader has denied the charges, and Monday morning the state will attempt to shake his story on cross-examination. Nelson late Friday rested his case after presenting the 18-year-old girl who testified as to her relations with Nelson.

Nelson Denies Charge

In opening the defense, Eugene Haral, Nelson's attorney, promised to bring in witnesses who would say that on July 4, 1932, when Nelson is alleged to have assisted the girl to his home, Nelson was at the Isabaraels and then with Mr. and Mrs. Rader in St. Paul. Witnesses also were promised to testify the girl and Nelson had trouble because she refused to stay choir rules, and that she had been discharged for that reason.

A former South St. Paul school nurse also was a defense witness. Nelson's counsel has an having seen Nelson call for her several times in 1932, denied she had ever seen Nelson under such circumstances when called as the first defense witness.

After Nelson had denied the charges, he said he met once or twice alone with the girl since she joined the choir in 1931, and declared he had been forced to dismiss her for infractions of the rules.

Saw Girl at Nelson Door

The state scored when District Judge Lars O. Rue denied a motion to strike from the record the testimony of a man who said he saw a young girl at the back door of Nelson's home the night of last July 4.

The witness, a Duluth man who was visiting his parents, who live above Nelson at 1611 Portland avenue S., said he heard a noise at the rear door and walking part way down the rear steps saw a girl running from the door.

The witness was unable to identify the 18-year-old girl who is completing witness in the case, nor could he deny it was she, but the testimony partly verified the girl's previous testimony that she had stayed at the Nelson home the night of July 4.

O. P. B. JACOBSON WILL GREET SAILOR PAL AT WORLD'S FAIR

Member of Official Party to Welcome Norwegian Ship

When Magnus Andersen sails down Lake Michigan on the Norwegian training ship Sorlandet, headed for the World's fair at Chicago, one of the members of the official welcoming party will be a fellow mariner of years ago—O. P. B. Jacobson of Minneapolis.

Mr. Jacobson, who retired last year as chairman of the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission, served as a seaman for a number of years, and often met Mr. Anderson when he was visited Mr. Anderson at his home in Norway.

Visited Fair in '32

Mr. Anderson, Mr. Jacobson recalled today, sailed the tiny ship-Viking, a replica of Leif Ericson's viking boat, across the Atlantic ocean to the World's fair at Chicago in 1933. When it became known Norway would have no official representation at the fair this year, Mr. Anderson led the movement which resulted in the decision to send the training ship Sorlandet.

It was arranged that he would join the ship at Montreal and make the rest of the trip up the St. Lawrence river and through the Great Lakes. This will be the first time a full rigged ocean sailing boat ever has been on the Great Lakes.

Mr. Jacobson also was asked to make the trip from Montreal to Chicago, but he subsequently was named by the World's fair officials to membership on the committee which will entertain the country's official greeting party, the Sorlandet as it sails down Lake Michigan to Chicago.

Reach Chicago June 20

The boat is scheduled to reach Chicago June 20, which has been designated "Norwegian Sailors' day" and June 19 will be "Swedish day." Nonday will be "Finnish day." Numerous Minneapolis and Minnesota residents are planning to visit Chicago at that time.

The ship left Norway April 5, manned by a crew of 30 boys who are being given training as sailors. H. Brunsvik is captain of the ship. At the World's fair the lower deck of the vessel will be turned into an exhibition room, lined with pictures of Norway's scenery and trade.

So important was the trip of the Sorlandet regarded, Mr. Jacobson revealed, the Norwegian Journal of Commerce and Shipping devoted an entire page to the story, which was contained in its weekly foreign edition, published in English for the benefit of readers in Norway.
